The exhibition showcases the strength and diversity of Europe's cultural output and highlights the importance of a united Europe during times of political uncertainty. The exhibition looks at contemporary European art after the fall of the Iron Curtain, underlining the importance of intercultural dialogue today.

It raises questions about freedom, dignity, democracy and respect whilst highlighting the continent's artistic production in the context of historically relevant and current themes, such as political and personal identity, migration, (mental) landscape, gender and equality, nationality, territory and geopolitics and social conflicts.

Diversity United is presenting chosen works and new commissions by 90 key European artists active today and spanning generations, genders and European regions. These include Michael Armitage, Eija-Liisa Ahtila, Monica Bonvicini, Olafur Eliasson, Adrian Ghenie, Mona Hatoum, Ilya and Emilia Kabakov, Alicja Kwade, Annette Messager, Roman Ondak, Gerhard Richter, Slavs and Tatars, Wolfgang Tillmans (full artist list available below).

The chairman of the Foundation for Art and Culture, Walter Smerling, and the general director of the Tretyakov Gallery, Zelfira Tregulova, head up the curatorial committee consisting of internationally curators, including Simon Baker (Maison Européenne de la Photographie, Paris), Faina Balakhovskaya (Tretyakov Gallery, Moscow), Kay Heymer (Stiftung Museum Kunsthpalast, Düsseldorf), Pontus Kyander (writer and curator, Helsinki), Camille Morineau (AWARE, curator, Paris), Johanna Neuschäffer & Anne Schwanz (Office Impart, Berlin), Hilke Wagner (Albertinum, Dresden), Peter Weibel (ZKM Karlsruhe).

“Europe consists of many amazing landscapes, not just geographically, but socially, politically and culturally. Artists are able to unite and form those worlds”, Walter Smerling, the chairman of the Foundation for Art and Culture, says. “This multitude of artistic voices from all over Europe create an insightful image of our cultural sphere. As the exhibition is limited to 90 artists it does not claim to proportionally represent the entirety of Europe, it is instead conceived ‘essayistically’ as a portrayal of this sphere. This view of the ‘artistic face of Europe’ champions freedom, respect, dignity and tolerance, for the preservation of diversity - the right to be individual. However, the artists also demonstrate how fragile these values are and how much we must support them. With Diversity United we will create a social dialogue, to prove that communication is essential in the search for peace and understanding.”

“What can contemporary art do today, when the world looks so complex, so conflicting and divided? What is the artistic identity of Europe and what does national identity mean today?” asks Zelfira Tregulova, general director of the Tretyakov Gallery. “The central question is should art develop its own way of talking about the questions which are most important nowadays? Diversity United raises these important issues, to present a broad panorama of different artistic approaches, a chorus of voices which encourages visitors to think, to analyze, to discuss, to feel compassion or experience deep emotions - thus rendering human in a world which sometimes appears hostile to humanistic values.”
